The Land Court In Matakaoa

Chapter 3. THE MATAKAOA EXPERIENCE 1769-1875

Utilisation of Land and Sea at Matakaoa

This discussion touches briefly on some apparent differences between Maori and European perceptions of land and sea. It suggests how these differences influenced concepts of ownership and has therefore by implication influence on the investigations of ownership by the Land Court.

At the time of the signing of the Treaty of Waitangi the European concept of land centred upon conspicuous utilisation, that is the alteration of landscape by clearing, cultivation, etc. Visible use suggested occupancy and by implication right of occupancy and therefore ownership. Four years after the Treaty guaranteed the Maori people 'full, exclusive and undisputed possession of their lands and estates, forests, fisheries, and other properties ... so long as it was their wish' (cited in Colenso, W. 1890:39-40) there were moves in Britain by a Select Committee to take Maori [p44] land for the Crown (see Kissling, G.A. Report of Hicks Bay for the Half-year ending July 1st 1845, CN/M 15:497). In 1846 a despatch was sent to the Governor 'to proclaim all native land, from which benefit is not derived, in terms of actual occupation and improvement, the property of the Crown' (Earl Grey, the Secretary of State to Governor Grey 23rd December 1846).

At East Cape, when the missionary Stack tried to make a road from the mission station to the Church at Rangitukia - 'almost six minutes walk': 'a number of baptised Natives opposed [him] most angrily ... because it would take up some more of their land which at the time lay wild and uncultivated' (Report to C.M.S. 17th December 1844). He also wrote:

'The favor of our cattle running upon the Natives waste land in this neighborhood is regarded by them as a great compliment though it has been plainly stated, that for the grass that they eat the principal of the increase are expected to be given to the Lords of the soil [that is, the owners]' (ibid).

1 Areas that have not been “exclusively used and occupied”: If the area of foreshore and seabed in the Common Marine and Coastal Area (MACA) has not been “exclusively used and occupied” by hapu members “from 1840 to the present day, without substantial interruption”, then it should not be awarded CMT, on this ground alone. Any area of the coast where there is regular road or sea access, cannot be said to be exclusively occupied or used, unless the public have been refused access and use of a coastal area by the hapu.

Generally, where a road, walkway, unformed public road, or landing exists, we have not heard any area where the public has not had access and use. So such areas, with legal public land access, to the foreshore, or to the beach (if from the sea), cannot be said to have been “exclusively occupied and used”. 2 Occupation different from ownership: It is not sufficient to have owned land along the foreshore, as land ownership alone does not imply “exclusive occupation and use”. Ownership does not even imply occupation of land. Owners may not live on the property (absentee landlords), or, as in the case of some land on the East Coast, owners may have leased the land to European farmers, as they did around Port Awanui, and possibly elsewhere on the East Coast.

Nor does occupation of land adjacent to the foreshore imply use of the foreshore, or exclusive use of the foreshore. 3 The Crown owned the territorial sea from 1840 to 2003, and no-one has owned it so far: Until 2003 New Zealand’s foreshore and seabed was recognized as owned by the Crown, as it is under the British laws that New Zealand has been governed by since 1840, and under British law, the foreshore and seabed is owned by the Crown.

Hence there would have been no grounds for hapu ordering anyone off their MACA, even if they had wanted to do so. And by and large Ngati Porou welcomed both inland Maori tribes and European settlers to their coasts.

The Treaty of Waitangi gave the Crown exclusive right of land purchase in New Zealand. For this reason all land which passed from Maori control, even gifts, became the property of the Crown; it was then over to the Crown to sell the land or transfer its rights to the recipient of the land gift. All land acquired prior to the signing of the Treaty was subject to investigation by Land Claims Commissioners, who gave public notification of [p52] hearings in the New Zealand Gazette. Under Governor Fitzroy a newspaper in the Maori language had been established by the Government. Te Karere o Niu Tireni was principally used for proclamations by the Governor to the Maori people, although some letters to the Governor from Maori Chiefs, residents of Northland and Auckland, were also published. The Land Claims Commissions were advertised only in the English newspaper which suggests that these investigations were primarily for Europeans with little consideration of Maori opposition, in fact, theoretically at least since news of the hearing could be transmitted orally, land could be brought before the Commissioners without the knowledge of Maori owners. The Commissioners were solely responsible for the protection of Maori interests, but as employees of a European Government (which had no Maori representation) in which many of the land claimants were politically powerful, their protection had obvious limitations.

In 1842 Land Commissioner Godfrey advised that two claims to land near the East Cape would be investigated at Tauranga. Neither of the claims were investigated and while there is no indication in the Old Land Claims File (held at National Archives) why this was so, it is likely that the Commissioners (Godfrey and Richmond - see page 18) were kept so busy with Northland claims that they never arrived at Tauranga. Two years later a further advertisement was given, this time they were investigated.

The first claim considered was Captain William Stewart's five hundred acres at East Cape, known as 'Warika Hika'. Although the boundaries were not given the block was alleged to have been bought by the claimant in 1825 from the Chiefs 'Takaiki, To Toerangi and Purahaki'. A quantity of merchandise of unstated value was given to the Chiefs, who in turn gave a 'native' ornament as proof of the sale (New Zealand Gazette 27th January 1844:33).

The second claim was more substantial - Frederick Whitaker claimed two thousand acres at East Cape; bounded on the north-east by the sea and on all [p53] other sides by land owned by 'natives'. Thomas Bateman was alleged to have purchased the block for merchandise worth £100 sterling from the Chiefs 'Katakekapu and Katekititiriki' in 1839 (ibid:32). In an explanatory letter to the Commissioner, Whitaker stated that:

'neither the precise date of the conveyance nor the particular articles given as the consideration can be stated in consequence of the writing recording the original having been lost when the schooner, Trent, the property of Captn Thos Bateman was driven on shore in Coromandel Harbour' (29th August 1844 in O.L.C. 510).

Both claims were dismissed as claimants failed to produce further evidence, or to appear before the Commission (O.L.C. 963 and O.L.C. 510).

The earliest effective land transaction between Maori and European took place in 1843 at Hicks Bay (Te Araroa):

Bell's account suggests a difference between Maori and European perceptions of land sales. For Maori people the concept of tika which means 'natural' or within the proper order of things (Johansen, P. 1954:172) is at stake. It will be recalled that my discussion of the Treaty of Waitangi touched on the concept of Kaitiaki, who preserve the natural order of things and keep them within their proper sphere. This implies that everything, of whatever kind, has its own nature. When it manifests that nature, patterns itself upon its own nature, and follows its proper course then it is tika, it is 'correct' (Johansen, P. 1954:172-6). Should the 'natural' or 'correct' (tika) order of things be disrupted the Kaitiaki ensured that balance was restored. Combined with this the missionaries had taught that repentance and confession of wrongdoing brought about complete absolution. The application to 'investigate' land sales, which took place contrary to Government law (by the Treaty of Waitangi the Crown had pre-emptive right of land purchase), must be considered within this frame of reference. In a sense the repudiation of wrongfully conducted land sales was an affirmation of the Law which united the two peoples (Maori and Pakeha) in the physical realm (see page 41). This sphere was watched over, cared for (tiaki) by the Governor. Bell as the representative of the Governor was asked to 'correct', restore the natural order between the two peoples.

From a European perspective the repudiation of land sales implied an [p60] attempt at fraud. Bell, as an employee of a Government interested in extending European settlement, was expected to confirm settler claims and issue grants to land.

The East Coast Chiefs' speeches at Kohimaarama emphasized the Queen's protective role. Wiremu Pahuru and Wikiriwhi Matehenoa (both of Wharekahika) addressed the Governor as 'to matou kaitiaki, to matou atawhai' - our protector, our benefactor (Letter to Governor Gore Brown 17th July 1860 in Te Karere Maori 30th November 1860:50),

European notions of land use in order to prove ownership of land in Court.

Aftermath of the Treaty

The Treaty of Waitangi gave the Crown exclusive right of land purchase in New Zealand. For this reason all land which passed from Maori control, even gifts, became the property of the Crown; it was then over to the Crown to sell the land or transfer its rights to the recipient of the land gift. All land acquired prior to the signing of the Treaty was subject to investigation by Land Claims Commissioners, who gave public notification of [p52] hearings in the New Zealand Gazette.

these investigations were primarily for Europeans the property of Capt'n Thos Bateman was driven on shore in Coromandel Harbour' (29th August 1844 in O.L.C. 510).

Both claims were dismissed as claimants failed to produce further evidence, or to appear before the Commission (O.L.C. 963 and O.L.C. 510).

The earliest effective land transaction between Maori and European took place in 1843 at Hicks Bay (Te Araroa):

the British Government intended to take the land of 'innocent and guilty alike' for the Crown (cf. Earl Grey's 1846 despatch advising Governor Grey to proclaim all 'waste land' the property of the Crown).

The application to ‘investigate’ land sales, which took place contrary to Government law (by the Treaty of Waitangi the Crown had pre-emptive right of land purchase), must be considered within this frame of reference. In a sense the repudiation of wrongfully conducted land sales was an affirmation of the Law which united the two peoples (Maori and Pakeha) in the physical realm (see page 41). This sphere was watched over, cared for (tiaki) by the Governor. Bell as the representative of the Governor was asked to 'correct', restore the natural order between the two peoples.

From a European perspective the repudiation of land sales implied an [p60] attempt at fraud. Bell, as an employee of a Government interested in extending European settlement, was expected to confirm settler claims and issue grants to land.

Relations between proprietors of coasting vessels and the East Cape people deteriorated. In 1855 an attempt was made by the people of Rangitukia to seize some of Atkins [22] trade-goods in payment for a promissory note issued several years earlier by a passing trader for wheat (Baker, C. Notes for Journal MS 22).

At the end of the month-long Conference at Kohimaarama a number of resolutions were passed concerning Taranaki, but as confusion arose during the voting, Chiefs were asked to give their consent by signature (compare the Treaty of Waitangi). None of the East Cape Chiefs appear to have signed this document, however their views were expressed in the letters required by the Governor at the opening of the Conference.

William Baker was sent to become its first Resident Magistrate (ibid 12th January 1862:19). Mokena Kohere [23] was appointed the principal Assessor for this district, and smaller groups - 'Hundreds' each with its own Assessor and Warden were also established. In all, there were three ruunanga 'hundreds' in the Matakaoa district - at Wharekahika with Iharaira Te Houkamau as the Assessor, at Te Kawakawa with Wikiriwhi Mateha (Matehenoa)[p68] as the Assessor, and at Rangitukia with Mokena Kohere as the Assessor (AJHR 1863 E-4:40-41). Given that every one of these Assessors were leading Chiefs of the Matakaoa district, 'Grey's ruunanga system' merely reinforced an existent scheme of Maori self-government.

in the Matakaoa district - at Wharekahika with Iharaira Te Houkamau as the Assessor, at Te Kawakawa with Wikiriwhi Mateha (Matehenoa) [p68] as the Assessor, and at Rangitukia with Mokena Kohere as the Assessor

When the East Coast people told Biggs that 'it must be left for the Land Court to give us relief; ... he replied he would bring the land-taking Court' (Petition to the General Assembly from the people of Poverty Bay 1867, ibid).

To settle the land so that leases could be negotiated with Pakeha, Ngaati Porou applied to have their land investigated by the Native Lands Court in 1866, but found that the land had to be surveyed first. Then unexpectedly, they received notification of a Court hearing for September, but the Court did not sit - 'nor did any notice at that time reach us to the effect that the land was gone' (ibid). Another Court hearing was notified for the next month, but again it did not sit. 'This time however, they heard that the land had been taken'[36] (ibid). Hoping to get relief through the law (Te Ture which united the Maori and Pakeha tribes on the physical plane - see page 41), they applied again for a Native Lands Court hearing (ibid).

In 1867 six hundred Maori people (from all parts of the Coast between East Cape and Wairoa) gathered at Turanganui to attend a Court hearing under the 1865 Native Lands Act, and the 1866 East Coast Titles Investigation Act.[37] This Act, passed apparently with McLean's approval (to Stafford 17th January 1866, Letter Book Official Papers MS 32; Notes 1866 Octavo Sequence Box V, McLean Papers MS 32), allowed land to be investigated without the consent of owners, with the purpose of granting title to loyal [p79] Maori, and declaring lands belonging to persons who had engaged in rebellion, to be the property of the Crown.

When Captain Biggs, the Crown Agent, arrived he applied for an adjournment based on a clerical error that existed in the 1866 Act, and asked for more time 'to collate information against the rebels' (Judge Munro to Judge Fenton, 25th July 1867 in AJHR 1867 A-10D:4). Biggs was probably stalling to ascertain Government policy on East Coast land; only five months earlier he had written to McLean:

When the Court adjourned a meeting of all the East Coast people was [p81] held, and it was decided to petition the Government for relief. Their petition, which outlined the promises made by Governor Grey and Sir Donald McLean in 1865, to 'preserve' their land for their own use, and the attempts made by the Crown Agent, Biggs, to confiscate it, was taken to Wellington by Te Mokena (Judge Munro to Judge Fenton 25th July 1867, ibid).

In March 1868 another Court was held at Turanganui under Judge Manning. Captain Biggs applied for the hearing of all land from Lottin Point to Lake Waikaremoana, under the 1867 East Coast Titles Investigation Amendment Act. The Judge ruled against this, firstly because it had not been advertised (Gisborne M.B. 1:1 cf. 1867 Native Lands Amendment Act page 25) and secondly because the Court had no authority to investigate land without the owners' consent unless the cases were referred to it by the Governor (ibid). This ruling suggests that the Governor above all others was expected by the Government

In 1870 a Land Court was held at Turanga under Judge Rogan. This time several blocks of land from the Uawa (Tolaga Bay) area were investigated and made inalienable by lease or sale from the Maori people. While inalienability clauses held the land in trust for the Maori people, owners had no authority to determine who would inherit their rights to the land when they died. The contrast between the 1869 Commission and this Court is striking, although the same Judge was presiding. While the Judge continued to hear 'outstanding land claims', his major concern was with the investigation of Maori title to land. No longer was he expected to adjudicate on the 'loyalty' of the claimants, and his adoption of a mediatory role was consistent with the set of Maori expectations I have proposed. When the Waiapu block 'Kaitua' was called, Mohi Turei told the Court that the Waiapu Chiefs did not want their land investigated [p85] at the present, as they were rururu (troubled, busy) (Gisborne M.B. 1:107). While this probably referred to food shortages (AJHR 1872 F-3:12) it may also have referred to land disputes. it was then discussed in Court whether the Land Court should be allowed to investigate land near East Cape, and Judge Rogan intimated that he was prepared to wait on their decision (ibid). In another case, when a dispute between the Chief and his people arose over whether to make land inalienable, Rogan tactfully reminded the Chief:

'that many pieces of land has passed through former Courts without having been made inalienable and the consequence was that most of them had gone into the hands of the Pakeha, and told him that they [the people in Court] had paid a great deal of attention to what he had said about having no restriction placed on the Grant ... Rogan thought it best, although he was the "kaumatua" to listen to the majority in this manner, and the lands would be made inalienable' (Gisborne M.B. 1:115-6)

Anyone who wants to challenge the Court should come in front of the Camera to get the Truth out as I am telling the Truth and so everyone should tell the Truth too and don't lie

Its best to sort out the Land Ownership for my Saudi Bank and Building Project is on the International Business Trade Development and I am telling them who are the original CT landowners under the British Native Court Judges and not the Maori Pakeha Judges of New Zealand is a False Representation; for Bank Loans though I am not using our Land as Security for my USD $55 Billion Loan but that of the Potential Profit Share System Security for the Project Investment of the Land Title to the Country New Zealand over the Fraud New Zealand fake Crown Government and its affiliation with Israel America Canada New Zealand Australia Britain Europe Vatican Genocide of Palestine People Murdered Buried alive on their own Land by these Bad Colonizers this Court is Holding them all to Account under this 1834 King William IV Flag and Moai Crown Legal Authority and Jurisdiction.

I am also Claiming the IBC Singapore Bank as a Security of Investment of King George IV and Paramount Chief Tira Waikato Whareherehere Manukau Contract Sale and Purchase of New Zealand Country Head Lease Transfer Land Title to the British Crown Corporation as our Ownership Title to the Trillions of wealth now that the British Crown abandoned Ship in a Defaulted Contract; Lost at Sea in Admiralty Terms, making our Native Chiefs the British Crown Business Owners because of British Crown Defaulted Contract Non Performance.

Don't forget to have your original British Native Title before the Maori NZ Land LINZ Titles Existed from 1840 Treaty of Waitangi Date 6 February 1840 and no earlier date locked out.
